Desktop Drug Reference is an app with thousands of substances categorized into different categories. If you open the main page, you can find what you need by browsing through the different categories or types of substances. It is possible to search for a specific substance by typing in the name or by using the image of the pill, wrapping or contact. Unfortunately, some drugs have been mixed and their generic names have been removed from the image. Desktop Drug Reference has thousands of substances organized into groups by color. The unique color of each group allows you to identify the category. However, the categories are not very organized and the search feature is not very good. A better way to find the information about a specific drug is to use the search button. This feature is limited to the found substances since it shows the result of the search in the main window. The main drawbacks are that it shows only the possible side effects and the storage conditions. You can only filter the list by the usage or effect. The search results are usually crowded with false matches. In order to find the information about a particular drug, you have to scroll through a lot of results. The app could have a better search system since it helps you to avoid unnecessary searches.
