In the world of The Donnas, there is no escaping the constant, inescapable, world of ruthless ambition and grotesque powerplay. Born and bred in the gutter, at the age of 18 their new recording career skyrockets, catapulting them onto the brink of the top ten chart, where they're offered to up and leave their home turf for a big-money deal in Beverly Hills. Now, the Donnas are no longer the band they once were. Their sharp claws have been ripped off, leaving their egos hanging in shreds, their friendships shattered, their creativity drained. The Donnas could no longer be a band. But... Periodically, they'll write again. A lonely ghost of their old selves, remembering the good times, no longer able to access that place where they truly belonged. Can they reconnect? Will they even want to? Coming back is, as far as they're concerned, career suicide. Coma is back and he's brought old friends, new challenges, and a whole new meaning to the word 'loathing' with him. ReviewsThe Donnas: The Storm by GallopanPress Vampires, monsters, and magic, The Donnas' debut album, The Storm, explores the world they call home: Los Angeles. With a lyrical palette inspired by their roots in the world of gritty rock music, The Donnas confront, and hilariously skewer, the dark machinations of the music industry, dating, race, and gender. ReviewsThe Donnas: The Storm by Savage Vampires, monsters, and magic, The

What's new:

Now Old Dogs, Then Young? OMFGG. I read the news, trying not to listen to the radio out of curiosity, and the one song that popped out at me was Scott Helman's "And How." I absolutely love that song. I had a tape player upstairs for such occasions. Fortunately I was able to find both brother Dave and brother Jerry in the downstairs chat room room, despite the fact that I had taken to show fashion and some of their friend's what I'd become to them. They pulled up the download download, and we jammed for awhile. Then there was blogging, as one has come across more and more these days. I'm so happy that I discovered it. I've made some new friends, at least I thought so, but I've also met some people that have been there for me for close to a decade. Here's to the new millennium of WordPress and Blogger. Even if the very first Blogger blogging adventure should pass me by. Toad's Republic, as wonderful as their philosophy and songwriting is, just isn't that good. At least not for me. Their U.S. tour ended last week, only a few days ago, last last week. They put on some fantastic shows. Unfortunately I couldn't make that tour. I had to fit them in between other tour dates and other projects that have taken priority. Unfortunately this proximity to the date of To Adore You's release allowed their record to be overshadowed. It's not that I don't think they're fantastic - I love them! It's just that I love them on the road. I love them in a way that has to do with the warmth, the kindness, and the attention to detail that is organic in a band that is hungry and young and touring three nights a week for the last several months of their lives. When I finally arrived at home last week, my boy Rob Soto was waiting for me outside our gate. He was going to take me to Barry's Bleeding Knees so I could grab myself some buffalo wing sauce and then take him to see the last night of the To Adore You U.S. tour. I would have to take pictures and make my own review of the show. On the way over we stopped at the old studio that the BKB has been occupying for the last week. The band was recording there this morning. The studio is set up off one of the

Zero-K is a massively-multiplayer online space simulation game, emphasizing the freedom of space travel, trading, exploration, and combat. Create your own character and travel to new and mysterious planets. In time, you could find out what happened to the human civilization that once lived on planet Earth. In Zero-K players have the ability to take command of various ships and trade goods between space-faring ships and planets. Features include: * Become an explorer and travel to completely unknown and distant worlds. * Trade goods with other players and be rewarded for it. * Battle against other fleets of ships. * Explore the galaxy in 4 start locations and 16 new planets. * Fly in space, on the ground, or both. Zero-K was developed using the Unigine engine, allowing for incredibly realistic graphics. The Unigine engine will support future games that will be developed by Oxeye Game Studio. Zero-K is a game for, and by, the people. Zero-K has been in development for 4 years and started in Oct 2006. Since this time we have made good progress and made a few great releases including the first game demo. We invite you to try out the game and see why Zero-K is being called the Space Sim that is for people not for profit! Website : Demo : Contact :
