2006/2006.5 {#s5c} A real-time Taqman assay for detection of IBDPV in clinical samples is an improvement on the in-house PCR assay of Stratton and Glick described in Alphaviruses and Paramyxoviruses, 1997, p. 309--316. The assay targets the 5′-UTR region of the virus genome. The assay consists of 5 primers (detecting respectively, NSP1, NS 3, S, M, and E genes) for the detection of an internal control (IC) gene and IBDPV. The IC gene, which is a part of the adenovirus genome, is present in every IBDPV and is used to normalize the viral RNA input, thus allowing for comparison of samples of different loads. The method uses an IC gene that spans parts of two exons and is highly conserved in IBDPV strains. The IC gene is less conserved in other avian viruses. A pair of probe-specific oligonucleotides (probes labeled with different fluorescent dyes) complementary to the target (IBDPV 5′-UTR region) and the IC gene are added to the reaction mixture. The IC gene is amplified in the same reaction tube as the IBDPV target. Thus, amplification of the target occurs only after amplification of the IC gene (a process that takes place in real time). of Atlantic City by the end of February. The Atlantic City casino resorts are anxious to get their new gaming deals approved by the U.S. Treasury, which will be crucial in determining whether the resort can compete in the new global marketplace. South Florida, the center of the international horse racing industry, will also likely benefit from the decision, as it gives the area a decided advantage over other countries that are competing for the same wealthy client base. Having been granted the license, the developer anticipates being able to begin building the project in roughly five years. The riverfront is set to house up to seven casinos, as well as numerous hotels, restaurants, shops, conventions and clubs. The developer had initially planned to build four hotels. However, after analyzing their competition, the developer decided to add an additional hotel to the project in an effort to keep Atlantic City competitive. According to the plan, the Atlantic City Liberty Plaza is set to become the tallest building in New Jersey, reaching a height of 3,192 feet. The third project, the Atlantic City Marina, will feature 53,000 square feet of retail space, which will be above the casino and the 182,000 square foot casino itself. The Marina will also contain 135,000 square feet of room space and will offer visitors the chance to enjoy the Atlantic Ocean. "The rise of the riverfront has been planned for decades," Adelson said. "We look forward to a vibrant, exciting and bustling future." The project is being financed and will be developed by a group comprised of Shanghai America Group Limited, Oceanport Ocean Master Developments LLC and a unit of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey.Battle of Kells The Battle of Kells was fought on July 17, 1189 at Kells in Meath.
