Acid Trip is a pixel shooting game that heavily relies on atmosphere and gameplay tricks. It's a hardcore- and retro- aesthetic sweet-spot. As a first-person shooter, you navigate through a series of levels as a character trying to earn as many points as possible. This is done by shooting and killing countless enemies, which you can either pick up, or by shooting them and watch them explode. The game is developed as an indie game and is made with the purpose of killing off all your frustration of playing over and over again the same old shooter. "If you're a fan of indie shooters this is the game to play. Forget the loud explosions and forget the generic costumes. Acid Trip is a technical masterpiece that blends retro-feel and modern techniques to create something really special." 10/10 - metacritic About the Author: Juha Pitkänen has been programming games since his early teenage years, as he can still use his cousin's GameBoy for a few games of Tetris. As a game designer, he has created different games in various genres. Some of them are free-to-play, others are full-featured commercial games. He has competed in tournaments like GDC and IndieCade. As a finishing touches, the internet is full of made-for-TV movies based on his games. It's been a long way for Juha but he loves it! "This indie game is superb. As a shooter, the nostalgic feel of the game's visuals – alongside a superior control scheme – just give you goosebumps. Acid Trip provides you with a much more visceral experience than any recent shooter and the boss battles are just as impressive as any recently released FPS." 10/10 – metacritic

About the Author: Jean-Christophe Dens has been tinkering with games since the 80's, when Atari consoles were the only game consoles he had to play. He has created several games and game music for several platforms and genres, as well as several commercial games. His name is now well-known in the game development industry. "Acid Trip is a game made for people who loves games. A game made for twitch gamers and for shoot'em up fans. If you want to play a game that'll make you as happy as if you had just won one of the most prestigious game awards, Acid Trip is your game.” 10/10 – metac

It is a sad day when I tell you this site is dead. I know the website has been dormant for some time but I really hope the large amount of gamers and interested people who came here find this news disappointing. I worked hard on this site and to release it unfinished is a terrible feeling. The same situation happens to me when I release my games, so in my opinion if a website is abandoned by the creators, it is a bit like releasing a game unfinished. I do not want to hear any negative comments towards the website. I can easily change the domain name to a new site, so please keep the criticism in mind. In the past, it took me several hours a day to upload and edit the most of my content, and on weekends the site was often unavailable. I am proud of what I created here and will do my best to keep it running smoothly. I will continue updating the website in the future with fresh content such as videos and reviews, and will look for a new website to put my efforts into. I hope the community will remain here to support and keep the website running. I am really really sad today... When we decided to bring people together to play and share our experiences, it seemed like the idea of being a couple of decent people on a community website. We all were playing games that we loved and we were giving our best to make it be the best it could be. But sometimes we only play games when we want to beat the things that we can beat, or when we want to show off our skills on games we enjoy a lot. And we were doing that. I have been playing games for the past 20 years and my passion for gaming will always remain. Some games are so exciting to play and some are just so difficult that it feels great to try them out. But some are just so difficult that I find myself playing more as a way to have fun while learning. Sometimes when we play a game, we never really have fun and we just play so we can earn some sort of achievement or be popular. We were not like that. We are decent people and we didn't want to play any game only for the sake of it. On this website, we have tried to offer the best content that we can to the people. For example, we have been improving the layout of the website so that it can be easily accessed, so that we could give more content and information in the coming years. We tried to keep the

! It's a little bit fuzzy, an' all the gals like it. And how could it not be, especially with a name like Itsy-Bitsy? In fact, the name fits so perfectly it seems to occur naturally, without our having to give or receive an intentional thought about its relations to itsy bitsy. Consider the role ity bit the other day. It appeared in the middle of my newspaper minding its own business, completely a-fuzz, and that's all. An' then when I sat down to write, Itsy-Bitsy wasn't there to spoil everything. Look, I mean. Show me an itty bitty thing that a person don't notice. The dewdrops on a wild rose for instance. You look down, up, there they are -- big ol' juicy dewdrops. What's more, those wild roses don't do nothing to it. Out they just grow, an' the dewdrops just slide right off, an' the rose gets even wilder. I don't know whether the English language is perfectly adequate to describe the awesomeness of those wild roses, but I swear it's a fact. I've been taking the word itty bitty back to the dictionary, but it appears the little fellow's being misused, misapplied, all over the place. You see it used in stories about things like babies, or papir napkins, or, as my cousin Maryann can attest, the Little Debbie snacks. According to our definition, all that's itty bitty is a wee drop of gravy from a bowl, or a fine bit of bread. That might be pretty nice, but it doesn't tell me a thing about a wild rose's dewdrops. Somebody needs to figure out if there's some better way to express a sort of dopey innocence about small things, especially themselves. Before long, though, I find myself back in woods somewhere, out in the sunshine, all blurry-faced, for a fellow named Itsy-Bitsy. Little darling. I'll find someplace to sit down and mind my own business now, and let her alone, an' she'll go right on bein' babyish, without a care in the world, with me an' nobody else. More Nodding, Anyway It seems some guys have a certain itty bitty thing they
